Re: Recommendation for Bullwinkle J. Moose

Dear Committee Members,

It is with a mixture of professional obligation and residual cranial trauma that I recommend Bullwinkle J. Moose for advanced study in applied chaos theory. During his tenure as my research associate in the Department of Unintended Consequences, Mr. Moose consistently demonstrated a singular capacity for transforming routine tasks into multi-act farces. His fieldwork—most notably the "Upside-Down Cake" incident, in which he inverted an entire laboratory centrifuge while attempting to "help gravity along"—produced data sets that continue to baffle peer reviewers and janitorial staff alike. Colleagues have described his methodology as "instinctive," a term I have come to interpret as a euphemism for an almost artistic disregard for sequential reasoning.

Mr. Moose's collaborative work with his longtime co-investigator, R. J. Squirrel, further illustrates the distinctive qualities he would bring to any program. In one particularly memorable expedition, he successfully neutralized a pair of foreign agents by mistaking their concealed explosive device for a novelty back-scratcher and deploying it in the opposite direction from the intended target. While the resulting crater required several weeks of landscape repair, the episode did yield a peer-reviewed note on the statistical unreliability of moose-based threat assessment. I am confident that any institution bold enough to admit him will find his presence both memorable and, in the strict actuarial sense, insured.

Sincerely,

John T Kulas
